"GUR MILIS MORAG."

REFRAIN.

Gur milis Mórág
 Gur laghach Mórág
 Gur milis Mórág
 Nighean Eoghain Òig.

1.

'S i Mòr an àilleachd
 'S i laogh a mathar
 'S e bhi 'ga taladh
 Mo rogha ceòil.
 Gur milis etc.

2.

Gur mi bhiodh uallach
 Air ruigh nan gruagach
 Ach Tormad Ruadh
 A bhi fuar fo'n fhoid.
 Gur milis etc.

3.

Mo mhìle marbhaisg
 Air an Fhrangach
 'Nuair leig e nall thu
 Chur anntlachd oirnn.
 Gur milis etc.

The story of this song is a Hebridean analogue to that of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden." The woman, who in the song is singing to her child, had, when she was a girl, two lovers. The one she married went away as a soldier and was supposed to have been killed. The other took his place in the affections of the woman. But the long-absent man unexpectedly returns, and the woman (hearing of his return) is singing this song to her child (which is not his child) as he arrives at her cottage door. It is a song of passionate love for the child, and of as passionate desire that the unexpected and unwelcome husband, 'Tormad Ruadh' were under the sod.

A RAASAY LOVE LILT.

Thainig an Gille Dubh.

Gaelic words ascribed to Lady D'Oyley,*
one of the Macleods of Raasay.

Arranged for voice and pianoforte by
MARJORY KENNEDY-FRASER.

With a crisply marked rhythm.

PIANO.

The piano introduction consists of two staves. The right hand plays a melody in 3/8 time, starting with a quarter rest followed by eighth notes. The left hand plays a rhythmic accompaniment of eighth notes. Dynamics include accents (>) and a crescendo (cres.). The instruction 'una corda' is written below the left hand.

The Milking Songs or Cow's Lullabies are among the quaintest of the old croons. The first given, "Il a bho-lagan," from S. Uist, is a good example of the happy use of an irregular rhythm (i.e. 7 beats in the bar) which sings delightfully to the natural swing of a dairymaid's milking in the byre. The second is of historical interest, referring, as it does, to the doings of a noted sea-reiver or pirate from Mull. Touching the use of the taladh or soothing croon by the people of the Isles 200 years ago, Martin, in his most entertaining account of the Western Isles, published in 1703, says of these lullabies:- "When a calf is slain it's an usual custom to cover another calf with its skin to suck the cow whose calf hath been slain, or else she gives no milk, nor suffers herself to be approached by anybody, and if she discover the Cheat, then she grows enraged for some days and the last remedy to pacifie her is to use the Sweetest Voice and sing all the time of milking her?" A good example of such a coaxing sympathising croon from the Island of Eigg, as noted from the singing of Miss Frances Tolmie of Skye, is here given.

As a last example of the Milking Croon, this Dairymaid's lilt with its capricious syncopations may be compared with the syncopated tunes of the Mermaid's Croon and the Sea-Sounds. The air was noted from the singing of M^{rs} Mackinnon, Castle Bay, Barra, and the words were collected by Kenneth Macleod.

Little seagull, ocean seagull,
Homeward[†] seagull, hide thy tale not—
Tell me where the fair ones lie?
I left them all in the ocean depths,
Mouth to mouth and each one breathless,
Back to back and red blood flowing.

Little seagull, ocean seagull,
Many a stripling fair-young sturdy
Many a stout-heart bold and stately
Lie in sleep in the ocean-cool;
That not the tell-tale that cuts my heart,
But Ruairi* my own to be one with them too,
Ruairi Og; my bird-singing of spring.[‡]

Little seagull, ocean seagull,
Oft I laid me under his plaid,
But not in the croft I laid me down
But a grassy dell in the birchen copse,
Mist of the bens over us rolling,
Croon of the burns passing us by,
Far away the low of the stag.

O little seagull, ocean seagull,
The Virgin's eye be night-watching me,
If his pillow the sandy wreath,
If his shroud be the tangle-swathe,
If the seals be his wake attendants,
If the fish be his gleaming candles
And his harp-music the croon of waves.

* In the Land-under-Waves the spirits of the drowned ones ever wait for the coming of the "White Ship of the golden rudder and the silver masts and the silken sails" to carry them back to Tir-nam-beo, the Land-of-the-Living.

† "Homeward Seagull". Translated thus because the Gaelic word Cuan, "Ocean" originally meant "harbour."

* RUAIRI OG (Young Rory) was one of the Dunvegan Macleods.

‡ "Bird singing of Spring". Sweetest possible music. The idea is that the singing of the birds in Springtime seems doubly sweet after the gloom and the "dumbness" of winter.

THE WATER-KELPIE'S SONG.

THE each-uisge, the water-horse, popularly but perhaps erroneously known as the Kelpie,* is the most terrible and the most feared of all the supernatural beings which the Gael has to contend with. To men he appears as a huge black hairy monster whose snort and gnash haunt them ever after like a nightmare; to women, especially the young and fair, he appears as a handsome youth with golden hair and laughing eyes. In the early years of the nineteenth century he met one of the Eigg maidens and made love to her under the shadow of the Scùir, but the warm sunshine being stronger than his wooing he fell asleep (and did not that itself show that he wasn't natural!) with his head in the girl's lap and his hand in her fine black locks. And as the maiden gently stroked his golden hair, did she not find it full of sand! And when she looked at his feet, were they not both hooved! Being of the old Clan Ranald blood, however, she neither fainted nor screamed, but taking up a sharp stone,† quietly cut her hair free and escaped home. The Kelpie has been generally more successful with the simpler maidens of Skye and Uist, who have at various times been cajoled into his under-loch dwelling and kept there for at least a year and a day. In the end, however, he is always left sitting on a knoll, under the shadow of a rock, song-lulling his child to sleep and trying to bribe the mother to return to her charge:

A Mhór, a Mhór, till ri d' mhacan,
'S gheabh thu gadan boidheach bhreac uam.

A-vöre, a-vöre, return to thy sonny,
Shalt get a bonnie withy of trout from me.

All this is in strict accord with Gaelic folk-lore; the strong is always beaten in the end, and the fiercest supernatural beings are credited with certain human qualities which make them more or less lovable, and attract one's pity and sympathy. In this respect a parallel may be drawn between the Water-Kelpie's Song and the Address to the Deil. Robert Burns has been justly praised by critics for "his beautiful and relenting spirit towards the traditional Enemy of Mankind:"

But, fare you weel, auld Nickie-ben,
O wad ye tak' a thought an' men',
Ye aiblins might—I dinna ken—
Still hae a stake—
I'm wae to think upo' yon den,
Ev'n for your sake!

But the bard's Celtic ancestors had already gone one better when they placed a little child on the terrible Kelpie's knee and made him croon a mother's lullaby:

Mo sheana chab liath ri d' bhial beag baoth,
'S mi seinn phort duit.

My gray old mouth to thy wee tender lips,
And I singing tunes to thee.

Nor is it a far-fetched idea to hold that Burns learned his charity towards the Deil from old Jenny Wilson who, as he tells us himself, "resided in the family and had the largest collection in the country of tales and songs concerning devils, ghosts, fairies, brownies, witches, warlocks, spunkies, kelpies, elfcandles, dead-lights, wraiths, apparitions, cantraips, giants, enchanted towers, dragons, and other trumpery." At any rate, the Deil of Robert Burns is not the Satan of theology, but rather the Muisean‡ of Gaelic folk-lore—the gentlemanly scamp who is never out of mischief, and is always trying to take a mean advantage of poor mortals. And the analogy holds good to the end of the address. In Gaelic lore, Muisean strikes one as being at least as much fool as knave, and is as often as not outwitted by the clerics (a lost art though!) and by the wise men of the township; likewise with the Deil:

An' now, Auld Cloots, I ken ye're thinkin'
A certain Bardie's rantin', drinkin',
Some luckless hour will send him linkin'
To your black pit;
But, faith! he'll turn a corner jinkin',
An' cheat you yet.

All this is delightfully human and delightfully Celtic, and leads one to the "larger hope" (or rather the largest hope!) that the Deil may mend his ways and "still ha'e a stake." But how does the idea compare with the Gaelic picture—a little child being crooned to sleep on the kelpie's knee?

KENNETH MACLEOD.

* In Gaelic folk-lore the Kelpie seems to be represented by the peallan rather than by the each-uisge.

† In stories of this kind a piece of iron is usually the charm that frees the mortal from the wiles of supernatural beings. Iron put into a cradle saves the child from being stolen by the fairies; a horse shoe is lucky everywhere; a man may enter the School of Black Art or a fairy den or even the Kelpie's under-loch dwelling and come out safely again, if he has a bit of iron about his person, or has stuck it into the door on his way in. Have we an allegory here?—So the iron age overcame hostile powers which had previously been victorious.

THE DEATH-CROON.¹

IN the days of the old Celtic church, the Death-croon was chanted over the dying by the anam-chara, the soul-friend, assisted by three chanters. Later on, the rite passed into the hands of seanairean a' bhaile, the elders of the township, and the mnathan-tuiridh, the mourning-women, the latter eventually developing into a professional class, whose services could always be obtained for a consideration. In more recent times, the bean-ghluin, the knee-woman, the midwife, was also the bean-tuiridh, the mourning-woman, and as the friend of the folk in the coming and the going of life, was regarded with the greatest veneration both by young and by old. To this day the knee-woman of the isles chants her runes and celebrates her mysteries in the houses of birth and of death, but always with closed doors—metaphorically, at any rate. As recently as eighteen years ago, a Death-croon was chanted over a dying person in the Island of Eigg.

An ceò 's an drùchd,
An drùchd 's an ceò,
An ceò 's an drùchd
An sùil mo ghràidh,
An sùil mo ghràidh,
A Thì dh' fhosgail an t-sùil òg,
Dùn i an nochd an clò a' bhàis,
An clò a' bhàis.

The mist the dew,
The dew the mist,
The mist the dew
In the eye of my love,
In the eye of my love.
Thou who did'st open the young eye,
Close it to-night in the sleep of death,
In the sleep of death.

From the nineteenth to the sixth century is a far cry, but the Death-croon brings the two together. St. Donnan of Eigg and fifty of his muinntir, his disciples, had suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Queen of the Isle, and were sleeping their first night's death-sleep in the churchyard now known as Cill-Donnain. At midnight solus an aigh, a blessed light, was seen above the graves, and voices were heard chanting a croon of which only a few lines have been handed down.

Is moch a chuireas a' ghrian fàilt air Donnain,
Is moch a sheinneas an t-ian àilleachd Donnain,
Is moch a dh' fhàsas am fiar air ùir Donnain.
Sùil bhlàth Chrìosd air an ùir,
Reulta na h-iarmailt air an ùir,
Cha bheud cha bheud a dh' ùir Donnain.

Early gives the sun greeting to Donnan,
Early sings the bird the greatness of Donnan,
Early grows the grass on the grave of Donnan,
The warm eye of Christ on the grave,
The stars of the heavens on the grave,
No harm, no harm to Donnan's dust.

And said the old folk of Eigg: The Queen and her maidens saw the light and heard the singing and, way of the women! wonder brought them towards the churchyard. And, sure, there must have been tàladh, fascination, in the light, for as it would move they would follow, and did it not bring them little by little, and not little was that same little, to the loch² you know yourself, the one in which the each-uisge, the water-horse, lives—and, O Mary Mother, was it not there the judgment was!

In the isles the black loch among the hills is always associated with death and unholy deeds and croons. The sea, with its ebb and its flow, is suggestive of life. If it has the terrible strength, it has also the nobility, of the lion. But the loch among the hills is a snake—black and slimy, with death in its eye. A tale and a croon⁴ will tell the rest.

On a night there was, it befell a pears-eaglais, a cleric, to be returning from the hill to the shore-clachan, and what came upon him but the weather of the seven elements—and what can be worse than that! Since he could not do better, he did the best he could, and his only choice being an evil, he took shelter in a cave under a rock. He had not been long there when a great white lightning sudden-flashed before his two eyes, and in the glare he saw a deep black loch between two precipices; and O Blessed Being of the Graces! beside the loch was a man in the death-throe, and three wizards crooning over him—a lean black wizard, a bald grey wizard, and a sleek yellow wizard.

² Iain Og Morragh, the poet-schoolmaster of Eigg in the early part of the 19th century, began one of his songs in praise of the island with the lines:

Is moch a chuireas a' ghrian fàilt air Stròdha.
Early gives the sun greeting to Stròdha.

³ Still called Loch nam ban mór, "the loch of the big women."

⁴ The tale and the croon were got from old Vincent MacEachin, Island of Eigg.

Ars' am baobh caol dubh :

Ospag, ospag, fhir a th' ann !
 'Nuair bhios tu thall, 'nuair bhios tu thall,
 Bidh tus' an laimh, bidh tus' an laimh,
 Speachan an diugh, meanbhagan am màireach,
 'Gad itheadh, 'gad thachas, 'gad mhàmadh,

Said the lean black wizard :

Torture, torture, man that be !
 Over there, over there,
 Thou shalt be bound, thou shalt be bound,
 Wasps to-day, midges to-morrow,
 Eating thee, itching thee, tumouring thee,
 Over there, over there,
 Man that be.

Said the bald grey wizard :

Torture, torture, man that be !
 Over there, over there,
 Thou shalt be bound, thou shalt be bound,
 A raven above thee, a thistle in thine eye,
 A venom-serpent coming nigh, coming nigh,
 Over there, over there,
 Man that be.

Said the sieek yellow wizard :

Torture, torture, man that be !
 Over there, over there,
 Thou shalt be bound, thou shalt be bound,
 Wind a-freezing through the willows,
 Stinging cold like scalding water,
 Over there, over there,
 Man that was.⁵

And while the wizards were at the croon, the cleric was making the caim, the sacred circle, round about himself; and once he had made the picture of the Cross on it and blessed it in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, he knew then that no evil could come upon him, howsoever long till cock-crow—but for all that, O man of my heart, the loch was deep and the loch was black!

From the hills, the last refuge of paganism, the Death-croon leads us to the sea and the Iona coracles. A world of years ago (said an old Eigg woman),⁶ long long before Prince Charlie landed in Moidart, the folk there were fierce and dark and ignorant; they kept Bealltainn, Beltane, better than Christmas or Easter Sunday, and (O Mary Mother, sain us from evil!) it is said they would even be praying to the serpents. Columba of my love heard of this, and it gave him a sore heart that people should be so far in their own light as to turn their back on heaven and the saints—sure, he was ever the àilleagan, the beauteous-one, son of a king and grandson of a king, and he might have been a king himself, had that been his wish—but to get back to my tale, he sent two of his monks to Moidart to teach the folk there the good Christian ways of the church. But were they not the foolish ones, the folk of Moidart! They would not listen to the monks, and at last the younger of the two said: "We will return to Iona and leave the seven curses of the church on Moidart." In the dusk of evening the two were down on the shore, with their coracle in sailing trim, and something in their faces which no wise person would wish to see. "I hear the dip of oars," said the younger one, "and the sound is making for the point further down." Wonder soon brought them to the spot, and what they saw was a coracle gliding away into the darkness, a lady-lord clothed in white lying on the strand, and a baby boy sucking a cold breast. And the older monk began to chant the Death-croon over the dead, but I do not know what the words were, for it is said he never chanted that croon again, but always a better one. Before he was through with it, the eyes of the baby boy were upon him. "She is not dead," said the little one, "but she always loses life and milk when the monks of Iona lose their heat-love for the folk." What more? O treasure of my heart, miserable creatures like us may not know what passed between the Blessed Mary and her Son and the monks of Iona—but, at any rate, the two men returned to their coracle and made a hole in her.

KENNETH MACLEOD.

⁵ Witches and wizards were notorious for tricky diction. One of their worst curses went forth disguised as a blessing: An Tì bh' air Neamh 'gad bheannachadh, "The Being that was in Heaven bless thee." "May He do that same," said the unwary ones, and at once the curse took a grip of them. "May the Being that is in Heaven sain us," said the wise ones—and lo! the curse disappeared in black smoke.

THE LAY OF DIARMAD.

Literally translated from the Gaelic, as told in the Island of Eigg.

(Generally (and popularly) speaking, what King Arthur is to the Cymric Celts, so is Fionn, the Fair One, to the Celts of Ireland and Scotland. Of the points of resemblance between the different romances circling round these two heroes, perhaps the most interesting is the love-story of Diarmad and Grainne in the Fionn Saga, corresponding to that of Guinevere and Lancelot in Arthurian Romance. Here is the story of Diarmad, as told not so long ago by old folk in the Island of Eigg.)

There was a Beauty-spot on the brow of Diarmad, the son of Fionn's sister, and woman-soever who saw it took the love of her heart for him, so that nothing could gladden her but to be within sight of his eye. The rest of the *Fayne*¹ were not at all pleased at this; no worth was hunting or fishing or fighting if Diarmad was not there, but if there he was, there would be the women also, and think ye that fin of salmon or antler of stag or head of foe would come into camp, with all the women of the countryside about! At last, and at long last, the word went out that Diarmad must needs put a covering on his Beauty-spot, and if this he did, no more were women seen in the fighting camp of the Fayne.

On a day of days, Diarmad was walking to and fro in front of Fionn's house, and unwittingly he tramped on the tail of a little pup that was frisking and frolicing about his feet. Stooped the hero down to caress the pretty little awkward creature, and if he did, off his brow slipped the covering. And och! och! sure, mischance was in Fate that day, for who was standing in the door but Grainne, wife of Fionn, loveliest of women, the choice-one of Alba and Erin and every country on which a tale is put. No sooner got she a glimpse of the Beauty-spot than she took for Diarmad the full-love of her heart, and deeper was that love than the deepness of the sea, and stronger than the sun of the thaw. "I will go with thee, Diarmad," said she, "to the far-off edge of the world." "Thou shalt not go with me!" said Diarmad, "great would be the disgrace to me if I did wrong to my mother's brother?" "I will go with thee, Diarmad," said she, "so long as there is a drop of water in the sea or a beam of light in the sun, and when one or other of them fail, I will die with thee then?" But no eye had Diarmad for her, and his ear and his thought were towards the whining of far away hounds and they omening evil. And Grainne went then and put on Diarmad the Three Spells of Love, one in his eye to make him see what she wished him to see, one in his mouth to make him say what she wished him to say, and one in his heart to make him think what she wished him to think; and when Diarmad looked at her again, bethought he that here was a woman fairer than the rising of the sun after the night of the heavy dew, and took he for her now the heat-love of his heart, and stronger was that love than the fear of disgrace. "We will go, Diarmad," said Grainne. "We will go, Grainne," said Diarmad. And they took the track of the stag and the hind across the hill, and as they went they were leaving behind them the light of the day and entering the dusk of the night. At last they heard the whoop of the night-hag,² and they understood that this was the Forest of Gloom—at any rate, if that was not its name, no other name had ever been put on it. "We will stay here, Diarmad," said Grainne, "We will stay," said Diarmad, "but what if the Fayne come after us?" "They will not come," said Grainne, "if the Venom-boar be here, and it is here he is!"

But not so went the matter. Ere the little birds of song could sip the cool morning water, heard was the baying of hounds, and behind them were Fionn and his men. Diarmad came out of the wood to meet them. "Diarmad," said Fionn, "it is not the hunting of the stag that put us so early from home to-day." "If it is not that," said Diarmad, "it is a worse errand!" "That same," said Fionn, "we are on the track of the Venom-boar, and he spoiling our hunting since a day and a year—I like not, O son of my sister, the mischance that takes off me stag or hind!" "And not far off is that same mischance," said the other. "Thou wilt come with us, Diarmad," said Fionn, "it was not thy wont to be slack in the hunting-hill, and sweeter in the ear is the baying of the hound than the cooing of the dove in the wood!" "I will come with you," said Diarmad, "though it were the last time!" From the rising to the setting of the sun tracked they the Venom-boar, and if once they were on his scent twice were they off it all day long, and if at last he was killed, the honour of the deed to Diarmad.

"The length of the boar," said Fionn, "is seven feet four times!" "Three times," said Diarmad, "and thou wilt be at it!" "Measure and see," said Fionn. Diarmad measured—"Seven feet three times," said he, "and not an inch more!" "That may be so, as thou hast measured," said Fionn, "but measure thou the boar against the bristle, and thou wilt see that I am right!" Diarmad measured again, this time against the bristle, and if he did, into his finger went one of the poisonous bristles, and ere long Death was at his throat. "What is fated must happen,"³ said Fionn, "Diarmad it was, *Dearg*⁴ it is!"

"O brother of my mother," said Dearg, "where be thy healing cup?" "I left it at home," said Fionn, "but O son of my sister, I will not let death on thee; I will go to the well of the birds,⁵ and lift in my two palms the water that will make healing to thee?' And Fionn ran to the well and in his two palms lifted the pure clear water that the birds delight to drink, but Dearg was out of his sight now, and anger began to blind him. "He took off me the Beauty of my wife," said he, "I will not make healing to him." And as his anger rose, his fingers began to sneak from each other, and when he came back to Dearg, water nor water had he for the healing. "O brother of my mother," said Dearg, and he in great pain, "where be thy healing?" Stronger now was pity than anger in the heart of Fionn, and he ran back to the well of the birds, and lifted in his two palms the pure clear water that would make the healing of life. But Dearg was again out of his sight, and anger began to smother pity. "He took off me the Wisdom of my wife, I will not make healing to him." And as the anger rose in his breast, the water in his palms subsided, until at last not a drop was to be seen. Dearg had now the rattle in his throat, and the heart of Fionn filled again with pity, and he ran back to the well of the birds, and lifted in his two palms the pure clear water of healing. But he could not see Dearg now, and he could only think of the disgrace brought on himself and the Fayre. "He took off me the Love of my wife, I will not make healing to him, I will let death on him." And what of the water oozed not through his fingers was sucked up by the heat of his anger, and when he came back his palms were as dry as a rock under the mid-day sun. Dearg was now in the last of the Three Agonies,⁶ and Fionn shed over him the tears of love and pity. "My dear sister's only son," said he, "I will not let death on him, I will make healing to him." And he gave one great standing-jump⁷ to the well of the birds, and another great standing-jump back, with the pure clear water of healing in his palms; but if quick he was, quicker still was the coming of Death, and Dearg was now in his sleep.

And that night Grainne, Love-of-women, kept the death-watch over Dearg, and she made the Lay⁸ to him which the sorrow-women of the wake still sing. And next morning, when they were putting him into the grave, along with his hawk and hound, sudden-leapt Grainne in beside him—and she and Dearg were left in the Death-sleep side by side.

²The owl.

³ It had been prophesied that Diarmad and the Venom-boar should have "the one death."

⁴"Red," "blood red."

⁵ The tale of Diarmad has been localised in the Island of Eigg. Tobar-an-tuirc, "The boar's well," is still pointed out, and its water is supposed to have the healing virtue which Diarmad needed so much but never got. Within a mile of it is Tobar-nan-eun, "The well of the birds."

⁶ The Three Agonies are: An e so an t-Eug? Is eagal leam gur e. Is eagal leam nach e. "Is this death? I fear it is. I fear it isn't."

⁷Gaelic: crunn-leum—a leap without a run. A running leap is called leum-roid.

⁸ This Lay was of old considered the masterpiece of its kind—Gach dàn gu Dàn an Deirg. "The lays up to the Lay of Dearg." The version given here was carried from Skye to Eigg by Janet Macleod.
